First of all... one thing that seems a bit strange about all of this is that being a superhero has always been illegal. Vigilantism is illegal, right? But in the Marvel Universe, the law has usually looked the other way. Mostly. Although some characters have gotten into legal trouble at times. So the whole "work for the government or stop using your powers"-thing isn't really all that new.

This law seems to be targeting mutants more than anything, since some mutations, by their nature, are impossible not to use. And the bad guys won't care if they break this law or not, so it only affects heroes.

That, and my not so optimistic view on governments and their agencies, means I am totally against it.

Then again...if I was a powerful superbeing...I just might be a villain. If you can believe such a thing
