You have nothing to apologize for BHM! You are one of the few people that I know here that takes great care in posting comments. Even when my work is way out there, and I know it isn't your thing or that you don't understand the concept of the subject matter, you STILL take the time to post a comment. That means more to me than getting a 10 or getting a render in the top 10 for the week. It tells me that YOU took the time to say good job, or welcome back after I have been out of touch for a while. To me, when you say "It isn't my thing" and you still took the time to post a comment is a badge of honor for me. It means you felt that my work was worth your time for a comment. Everyone has their own path they have to walk and sometimes others don't understand the why a piece of art is made or what inspires it. You are one of the rarities here at HM, you give not art but words of meaning that build confidence in artist who may be struggling or thinking of quitting because they feel they are not good enough. Like Thayne and Chilly I tend to stay in within the 3D boundaries because that is what "I know", but you span all galleries and will be a bigger part of HM than you will ever imagine.
