well other then a few repairs still left to do it looks like the hackers were able to corrupt the stores language control files. nothing secure was breached and the database was not accessed. They replaced some commonly used words with some new code. changing some things like the site name and braking it. a new security patch for the software actually became available last week and I was going to update the security this weekend. But I guess I was a couple days too late

Anyway, I would like to thank those that sent me e-mails to bring it to my attention.

Hopefully this will be the last problem of this sort we have.
