WOW! did this topic take on a life of it's own and went a lot further than i expected it to. It was nice to see so many members chime in and offer suggestions. Unfortunately it seems like either everyone forget the main topic of this thread or really didn't think it as worth talking about. For those who commented I will again post it. Well at least the part I put the emphasis on...

Now i know everybody has personal lives and busy schedules, but I must admit that I'm a little disappointed on the very lackluster upkeep/updating of my beloved Heromorph.com. I suppose as being one of the original old school members I've grown accustomed to weekly updates to the site...new challenges, contests, top ten images etc.. but lately I haven't seen much of that. heck, the top ten images is from May for Pete's sake.

Okay? did everyone get that? This topic was never about comments or artist critiques. Its was about putting the fun back into the site. What ever happened to the Draw-Off? and the monthly challenges? "How to" Tutourials? Member art participation will never be an issue here...and no matter hard long we talk about it..if members don't want to comment on artwork then they won't. It would be different if we got members points for comments but we don't...so stop beating a dead horse!What drew [hey nice pun ] me to HM back in the days was the community atmosphere. members enteracted with each other. collaborated on work. challenged each other. chatted on a regular basis. etc..and didn't just post art and run. I suppose i should have interjected earlier since this was basically a personal gripe letter. sorry guys for causing so much unnecessary confusion.
