Well I see that they took your work down and put Alex Ross's stuff up. If this was your intention then you won. If you were wanting to show off your work, which you should do, then you lost. I totally and whole heartedly agree with your position and I'm on your side. If you wanted the credit, maybe the message in the board would have been enough. With that, you shouldn't have continued to debate it. But with the banner makers attitude, I think I would have been satisfied with them removing it. I mean, he gets credited with the banner, while you, who put in almost 100% of the work, gets nothing? I don't like it. There does take some creativity to compile the stuff to make the banner, but the talent needed to work in Poser and Photoshop, outweighs what he did. I don't know, seems no one won this one really.
