Not sure if this is a bug or a new "feature", but it seems the thumbnails on the gallery pages are the full images resized via HTML, meaning there are 200-500KB "thumbnails" on the page.

As one of those poor suckers stuck with dial-up for the foreseeable future, to say this is painful would be an understatement.

If this is a new decision by the site owners, then ignore this comment, but please give some consideration for us poor suckers with crappy phone companies...

Hey thanks for letting us know Blitzcraig we have fixed the issue. I didn't even know the thumbnails were that big. The glory of cable internet. Anyway, new thumbnails for images posted should be around 5 kb or so on average. images posted since we came back online will have the giant thumbnails but maybe a herald or someone will manually go thru and make new ones and replace them

(not likely)

But your thumbnail problem will be solved shortly.
