LOL....but going with what Hawk said earlier, these programs are just tools for the Artist, just another version of the paint brush, marker, white out, highlighters, crayons what ever you use to creatively express your self. granted I personally never saw what the big deal was about taking items and props and surrounding the model with it. but some of the end result while they may be created out of stuff that others have created, is still nice to look at. Latley for me it has been a tool. It gives me the chance to get the pose just right for what I plan on doing in the end. it also helps get lighting and shadows down as a reference point. Will I ever create a full blown poser/DAZ image? as of now no. Later down the road who know?.....it all boils down to "you say Potato...."
