I've been a member a while. I log in, look around (get my fix so to speak). Rarely do I post comments, usually someone has already made the comment I would have. I wouldn't necessarily call myself a lurker, that seems a bit... creepy, although obviously I identify with the label since I feel I need to defend myself.

I have no appreciable artistic talent, and I spend too much time trying to stay current in my job in what little spare time I have or spending time with family to try and pick up a pencil or attack Photoshop with a stylus. Weak excuse I know. I also have a guitar sitting in the corner collecting dust.

It's all good Bailey, there's no need to defend yourself.

I appreciate the talent of the people who post here. Some of you simply do professional quality absolutely stunning work. I'm not sure that my praise would provide any motivation. When I see some place where I think I can contribute something meaningful I do.

Thanks.

Thank you Bailey... and speaking for all artists here (in one of the rare instances when I can) we want to hear from you. Tell us what you think, even if it seems redundant. We particularly feel this way about praise
