

Forum: Movies & TV

Topic: Who's watching Heroes?

Subject: Re: Who's watching Heroes?

Posted by: Chup@Cabra

Posted on: 2006/10/24 9:29:28

It seems with the cheerleader that she can be permanently killed if you blow her brains out. She remained 'dead' until the stick was removed out of her head. I would assume that, unless she has a Wolverine-type healing factor (able to regenerate from even the smallest bit of left over flesh), her brain is the seat of her power.

I like the fact that they acknowledged that fanboys will watch this show, and made a fanboy a central character. So as not to upset any potential viewers with a stereotype, however, they made him a japanese Otaku (still a fanboy, but something most of us fanboys out there won't feel to insulted by :)).

Lets hope this show does better than so many of the other sci-fi shows of last season, that only went one season or only a few episodes (Surface, Invasion, and my favorite, Threshold).

Makes me wonder why similar shows on USA Network survive (Dead Zone, The 4400).