Does it strike you as funny that we are upon it's release date and there still is no actual images of this Who-ha working? Also, it looks like once you are airborne you will be able to stick your hands out and pull back nubs from the props. Is that site for real?

Yes, the site is for real.

No, on this design the tips of the propellers will be 45 inches to the side and 7 inches in front of the pilot. My arms reach is 35, from center of head to fingers. In addition there is the frame between the pilot and the propeller. This is on the twin-engine model; on the single engine the prop is behind the pilot.

Also, these figures are for illustration only. The important concept is the road-able aspect of the aircraft and the method of flight control.

No, there are no actual images. There is no actual prototype, yet. Need money, need engineers, am working on it.

Yes, the release date. Not all things happen as quickly as one would hope.
