1. How can SHIELD arrest someone for violating a law that's not a law yet? (Referring to SHIELD agents trying to arrest Cap.)

They weren't arresting him for violating the SHRA. They were arresting him for declaring that he would disobey their orders, and for threatening Commander Hill. Being a member of the US military means they can lock your ass up if you refuse orders from a superior officer. Hell, the real-life US military is currently throwing the book at a lieutenant who deliberately missed his deployment to Iraq.
