I think the main problem with the eighties and nineties is that advertisement companies really started to use sex as a product. Not that it wasn't done in the decades before but they really really started to push this in the eighties and more so in the nineties to what it has become today.

Images of half nude women became more and more common until finally it became the norm. Try to walk down a street in a urban commercial area with out seeing a half naked lady. Go into the grocery store and look at the magazine rack and try to count the number of tits staring back.

Truthfully, I think the reason everyone is having trouble picking a single image out of the 80's and 90's is the sheer volume of images that were taken. We became desensitized to sexy pictures during this time period.
