Superman and Batman as characters are both blatantly obvious Jesus metaphors anyway, so you can't really blame the movies for that.

Superman Returns was good but hampered by bad casting (with Lois Lane) and the need to be both a sequel/homage and origin movie for new viewers.

Batman begins was interesting up until the third act when he completely became Batman (then it lost the plot, as was inevitable with Batman characters).

Constantine was nothing like the comic books but I like it anyway for the plot and mythology.

None were great movies but were well produced.

Fantastic Four, that was bad. Sue was not blonde enough (I think they made her hair blonder for the sequel), it looked cheap, there was almost no storyline and the final battle was a joke.
