When BikerBot invited me over to Heromorph, I was a little bit apprehensive. I had been a member at comics2film when the invitation was issued. Out of curiosity I checked out the site and was very impressed with the quality of the art submitted. I didn't think that my work measured up. He assured me that if my work didn't measure up, I wouldn't have been invited. I decided, well "what the heck"? I submitted my first manip titled Vampirella ? Night Shift. I was given a very warm welcome and made to feel very much at home right from the start. I have always appreciated the feedback, both positive and negative. I believe that positive feedback is always nice to receive but we also learn from the negative. I have to agree with chillyplasma about the freaks. I think you will always find extremists in any fan site but they're the ones that make things interesting. They stir things up, rattle cages and bring out the best (or beast) in you. This is probably the best support group for our little addiction? and I'm here to stay (for as long as they keep me).
