I haven't seen it yet, but according to G4 TV and Ain't It Cool News, you do get to see the creature clearly before the end of the movie.

I'm not sure about the whole 'shakey cam' thing, though. I go to a movie to see a MOVIE, not something I could have shot (if my home city were actually being attacked by a giant monster that is [and I were stupid enough to film it instead of running like hell]).

It was the same problem I had with Cruise's "War of the Worlds", I wanted to see at least one good cinematic battle between the Walkers and the Army, then you can go back to the 'human development' part

I will see it in the next few days, though.
