i believe in the whole, it primarily IS art. yes, yes, i've heard the arguments, bout how anyone with the same program and models can do exactly the same thing, but thats like saying everyone with an easel and a paintbrush can be van gogh. its illogical. yes, the programs and the models are tools, and yes most 3d artists DON"T create their own programs or their models, and most painters don't create their own easels or their own brushes. their merely tools, and its wut each indiviual artist puts into it that makes 3d art. and its hard, to lose that samey look. just like its hard to get rid of the white canvas, or the white page.

so yes, i think its art. and yes i think this holds true to manipping and other forms of digital art. i view the computer as merely another tool to do the job.
