To me, Art is anything built by man that gives pleasure to any or all of our five senses.

But I tell you this: I hate Marcel Duchamp because he opened Pandora's box. Anything could be Art according to his ideas. And Art was not the same after him. I hope you are burning in Hell, Duchamp!

What I see is "bad" and "good" Art. To me, the atemporal (and good) Art is anything that survives, anything that show us a different vantage point. Anything that could be considered a new step in human perception.

So... to me, the sameness is ignorable which could be understood as "bad" art.
