rendering elements seperate as well as together.

All lot of times in the past when I was doing really large scenes I tend to assemble the scenes together in full in poser. and render the entire thing all at once at a low render setting. Then take and render the individual parts on there own at a higher setting then do the post work and assemble then together again in photoshop. using the original render as a guide.
this allows for much more complex images then my machine would allow me to create on it's own.
