As well couple things to what I have ready so far here. You as well should be able to select around the area of your image, basically you will select the image as a whole and then feather those edges outside of the selection, this should save your image from feathering too much.

As well and I use CS3 PS but you should be able to merge all visible into one layer. I usually merge as I go but only into one layer. If I have to go back to edit or change anything this will allow my progress to be able to be edited for a change or something I decide to change later. As well hope this helps, very avid fan of PS. Thanks for the great tips though here as well. Good things to keep in mind. :)
