one of the more interesting news bits to come out of the merger appeared in the latest issue of Entertainment Weekly where it stated:

"Pixar is said to already be eyeballing an Ant-Man movie."

Anyone reading the statement in Entertainment Weekly might immediately assume it means Pixar would do a CG-animated version of the Marvel second-stringer in a similar manner as their hit The Incredibles, but that might not be the case at all. Currently, Pixar Studios is in pre-production on a live action movie based on Edgar Rice Burroughs' John Carter of Mars, so the idea of Pixar "eyeballing" the already-scripted project could mean they might actively try to finance and produce a live action movie, taking the reins and burden off of Marvel Studios.

Well now, that could be interesting...though really, if they're gonna make an Ant Man movie anyway, it would be kind of cool to work him in to the Avengers lineup. But either way, if Pixar makes an Ant Man movie, I'd probably go see it.

The most interesting news to come out of this thread by far is that Pixar is doing the John Carter of Mars movie. That will be so effing cool!
