you are correct, concerning movies versus the comic book. in fact carbon copy is not what I was talking about. when doing a movie it should be something new. it makes things interesting. In the case of batman and dark knight, the movie writers at least kept with the spirit of the characters and every thing appeared logical and coherent. Even with the new Star trek reboot (here I am a fanboy) they took the spirit of everything that is trek and reworked it for a new generation but all the elements are still there. with wolverine too many things seem out of place. too many things seem forced and out of sequence. just a thought.
