First off, thank you Monsieurs Hazard and pigeon, and MissVee for your purchases. And thank you Stars, Mr. WH and everyone else for your encouragement, support, and enthusiasm, all of which made the comic possible. Had I not been a participating member here at HM, I'm sure I never would have even considered making comics. I must admit I have yet to see a printed version of it, but from what I've seen of Ka-Blam's products their colors are quite excellent. So, ironically, on Mr. Hazard's recommendation I'll just have to get one(!) And yes, the white cover was done deliberately because I wanted it to stand apart from most other comics. (Beatles, anyone?) You may have noticed the CO logo is a rip from the DC logo, plus the 4 stars making it CO 4.

Mr. Hazard I am so jazzed by your review that I'm not sure how to respond. I hope the sample(s) you received demonstrates the possibilities of POD for upcoming projects, secret or otherwise

Also what's exciting is that anyone can participate in the comics industry. As print on demand becomes more sophisticated it will become indistinguishable from offset. But print is only one option, which may or may not go the way of the Dodo bird. The delivery of content is changing rapidly as with Web comics, downloads, cell phones, Kindle, and whatever other portable readers enter the market, etc. Just a mere few years ago this wouldn't have been possible. So who can foresee the state of the marketplace in the next few years?

Until that time, here is a sneak peek at the opening pages of April's second comic, which so far promises to be wilder, weirder, and more way out than the first.
