I agree with a lot of the points being made in this discussion. But, the bottom line for me, is that I know whose images I want to look at. If someone new pops up, I'll scope out their work for a few images, and if it is consistently crap...they go into the mental garbage file, and that is the last I'll see of them. In other words, I just don't look. It's easy to tell when people are improving, and putting in some effort towards those that chuck out 6 pics after a couple hours. Now I sure as hell don't put myself in the "really good" class. I am continually learning new techniques, and enjoy doing so. But I felt I just had to throw my 2 cents worth in the mix.
