Well, first I'm a maniper not a 3D guy but I have some work with mixin manip with 3D.

A friend made the body in 3D and I replace the head with a real one, What I did (besides painting the body) was to search for a face that I liked and that face needed to have almost the same perspective as the 3D face. In this case the rest was easy because the only skin that show was in the face, I think it would be a lot more difficult to match the real skin with the 3D skin or the other way around.
