Dark Champions. Stationed in LA, to be the first line of defense against the X-Men. Also to draw positive media attention to one of Norman's forces, and away from the X-Men. Their Roster is as Follows:

Hercules (Thunderstrike) A registered hero who agrees to lead the Champions to keep an eye on Norman Osborn and relay information about H.A.M.M.E.R. forces in the area to Norman's enemies. Norman secretly knows this, and misrepresents Hammer to him to mislead enemies to his regime. He forsakes his hammer and lightning and cuts his hair to impersonate Herc.

Darkstar (Original Darkstar) A reanimated Darkstar under the puppetry of a necromancer. One of the few that Osborn can really count on, because she's not even mentally present.

Starfox (Original Starfox) As part of his penance for his actions under the influence of Thanos. Part of his agreement is to not use his suggestion power. Except when Norman tells him too...

Iceman (Hydroman) In an almost entirely Ice form, he hides behind a hologram of Iceman. If that Hologram fails, his own form will carry enough of a resemblance for the backup disguise to take effect without people noticing. He creates Ice by using three cloaked H.A.M.M.E.R. technicians using Relicas of Blizzard's equipment. They freeze 3 at a time what he gestures at with his arms. He is compiling a report to give to the Hood, a member of Osbourne's Cabal.

Angel (Burt Warthington) As Warren Worthington III's uncle, he would have inherited the family fortune if he hadn't killed Warren's parents. Disowned from the family fortune, he was given his freedom, provided he serve Osbourne. He was given 6 items to aid in the deception: Vulture's Juvenator, A synthetic pair of wings from the Red Raven's city in the clouds, an injection system that gives him Silvermane's fountain of youth potion (or a jellyfish/blowfish cocktail, if all else fails) a personal force field and a matter dispersal barrier to provide some protection when he lowers the forcefield to attack. The sixth piece is a blue and white suit just like the one Magneto gave Angel, that lets An outside body take control of the wearer. If Burt provides a working test subject, this design can be mass produced amongst H.A.M.M.E.R. and the Initiative, giving Osbourne absolute obedience from all whom he commands.

Black Widow (Felicia Hardy Black Cat) After World War Hulk, there's not a lot that says what she's been up to, so she's still eligible to take up the mantle with some red hair dye. Norman has her under his wing to keep an opening to Spider-Man available, and she serves him voluntarily to keep her great love's greatest enemy well in her sights.

Captain Marvel (Marvel Boy 5) Assigned by Osbourne to serve as ambassador for the Dark Avengers. Given means to depower, take control of, or otherwise subdue any of his teammates. He is under the impression that they are all villains working off their crimes.

Wonder Man (Smasher of the Shi'ar Imperial Guard #?) Always trying out for the mantle of Smasher, and always coming in Second, he was sent by Emperor Vulcan to spy on political shifts on Earth. As part of Osbourne's bids to amass power from beyond the stars, Vulcan offered him Smasher as a gift, with orders to assassinate him as soon as he poses a threat. And to kill all of Norman's minions who do not comply.

Ghost Rider (The car villain from Spider-Man Swing Shift) Forcibly possessed by a demon in exchange for the Demon's service in the Ghost Rider's likeness, he turns three H.A.M.M.E.R. agents into a Skull Cycle. He uses a lot of technology to avoid using his unique powers overtly. If he uses his powers to any significant degree, the forces of Hell will come directly to his Earthly location to drag him back and heighten his punishment.

She-Hulk (Hulk of Weapon X of the Exiles Series) Discovered in the Negative Zone with a Wonder Man Hulk, they were contained in the a special facility, until she was released by Norman, to serve as his enforcer. IN exchange, she gets to evaluate all inter-reality forces who enter the Marvel Universe. Her compatriots who betrayed and abandoned her, she gets to kill.
