Ok ok. So somewhere along the line your age starts to show through and those of you with sort of somewhere near half a conscious start to think about all those old bastards that were collecting like 40 years before you were a kid.

So case #1. Just because it was my first official "I'm fucking hooked on comics and everyone can kiss my ass"..... Captain Atom. Over the years I've heard some shit about DC buying him from Charleston comics. And having his story completely done over. So how did those old bastards feel about that? Because I'm pretty damn sure YOU are going thru the same shit now.

.... My personal thought. What they did to him for his overhaul kicked ass.

Case #2. Xmen.... Seriously, they could show a fossilized turd that somehow was let out my Galactus' father and the world would buy it and love it. In other words, Xmen can do no wrong.

Case C. Can you actually name how many times Superman, Jean Grey, Professor Xavier, and Captain America have died..... without looking it up? And which death do you actually get bothered about?

I mean seriously folks, the last Marvel game I played said the yellow and brown Wolverine was the "classic suit" and the yellow and blue/black was the new? Did anyone bother to look at the cover of his first appearance?

So long story short. Trade Paperbacks.... fuck all the rest.
