I don't know, I liked it, but I wasn't overly impressed. I feel it may have been slightly overburdened with computer special effects though, with 40+ minutes of the film being driven by this means of special effects. I just feel having some practical effects in the film might've made it so much better.

Now with how the roles were played and characters portrayed, well that was top-notch and the fight between Supes and Zod... levels above the preceding Superman films. The director's goal in this film was to give the audience the feel that this view of Superman could actually happen in our modern world....I think it was successful and apparently, so does the box office profits.

I'm trying to be as vague as I can here don't want to give away any spoilers... but you catch the Easter Eggs?
