I guess the Heromorph community is much like any other family. Kids grow up, move away, start their own lives, and slowly lose touch with parents or relatives. Change is good for any community, but change is usually hard to accept. That's why everyone always talks about the good old days. As much as we all look forward to the future, we always seem to dwell on the past. I hope all those missing members are doing well, and that they will come visit every now and then. The welcome mat is always out.
