Ok, just to make sure I am clear on this. We put our name in the pot for the contest, then be randomly paired off ( so no need for the 3 divisions?) then the paired off will work together through e-mail and other communications. will this consist of sending files ( with layers back and forth to each other? If so we may want to find out who is using what program. I for one use Paint shop, but if I get a Photoshop file I can open it but I get an error saying part of the file could not be opened. I did not want this to be a problem that could come up later on.

Okay: you sign up for the crossover (it's not really a contest, though), Max and I randomly pair people off, one DCGer with one HMer... assuming we get enough DCGers.

Then those paired off do a manip together. How you choose to communicate with your partner is up to you, though it'll certainly involve sending files of some sort. It could be .psd files with layers, but it could also be .jpg files for initial stages (ie, to get feedback on what you've so far done) and the full .psd files only for the final compilation of the image. Usually, once you've gotten in contact with your partner you'll be able to work out who has what program and in what manner it would be best to send files.
