Okay, here is my entry for this month's challenge.

Only its not a manip. Its an idea. Check it out:

Remember the game 'Operation?' cool for about 5 mins, then you never played with it again?

Well, my idea is to make it into one of those reality TV shows. Contestants are chosen each week, from applicants who are in need of surgery, and their own family members are brought on to preform the surgery. They have to work together as a family, and against the clock.

Of course, the familiar red buzzer will be incorporated, via a red light placed on the electees forehead, and will 'buzz' each time one of their family members does something wrong or removes the wrong body part. This will be a true reality show, with interviews before, during, and after, for those who make it through the surgery. Get the drama of ER with the real-life intensity of Fear-Factor and The Great Race.

And stay tuned for next season's spin-off, 'Sue My Spouse: Operation Aftermath!'
